

Mixing good moonshine with gasoline jes don't make no sense a'tall

Guest Columnist: Red Neckerson

We still talk round the dinner table bout the time Grandpa Neckerson pointed a shotgun at a revenuer. Ya see round these parts, dawg, we take our corn squeezin's rite serious. In fact our secret family recipe is illegal.

This hear gob'ment promotion of ethanol shor' is a switch from when they was stomping out our stills. I recon we jes didn't have the rite lobbyists, like the big boys do. Anyhow, putting that stuff in gasoline is jes crazy. Must be due to the kick-backs to politicians, cus it don't really do anything fer the environment.

My friend, Little Bill, works down at the hardware store a fixin' lawnmowers; and he sez that al-kee-hall jes eats up carburetors.

Me and my deer huntin' buddy, Hoot, been talking bout this mixing hooch in with gas and how it runs up the price of corn and the livestock that eats corn. Here's what we say: leave out the denaturant that's now bein' put in ethanol and maybe some of the product can be diverted from the supply chain to hep drown the sorrows of the grocery shoppers sufferin' from sticker-shock.
